When an architect starts working on a building idea or floor plan¹, he envisions the rooms and sections furnished with different furniture pieces. The furniture is placed and arranged according to area and calculations. The bedrooms, living room, TV lounge, kitchen, dining room, and guests rooms are furnished with different styles of tables, chairs, sofas, and cabinets.

The floor and elevation plans represent these tables, chairs, and sofas. There are many table and chair symbols available to add to your plan, and these symbols denote office furniture symbols and domestic furniture symbols.

1. What Are the Table & Chair Symbols

The Chair and Table are functional and circulatory elements in an interior design. These are placed in an area to drop an aesthetic sense of order. In a floor plan, chairs and tables are symbolized to show furniture's set-up and order. Table and chair symbols denote various types of chairs and tables which can be chosen for a house or building interior design.

Table and chair symbols are used for house floor plans and seating plans, office plans, kitchen plans, school plans, theatre plans, and hospital plans. That is why these are considered an essential component of a floor plan.

The most important part of a floor plan is to consider the mobility and portability for any amendments and changes. In that case, chairs and tables are the most portable elements of a floor plan as they can be shifted from one room to another and can easily be replaced by other ones. The art of choosing the right design of chairs and tables gives meaning to your house's interior design. So table and chair symbols enable an architect to visualize where the following table and chair set will look best.
